Senator Bright, in his speeches in Indiana, is very savage on Douglas, and warns his followers that they are on the path that leads stmight into the Republican camp; yet he is very careful to inform them that Douglas is not so bad as Republicanism. As slavery is the great tribulation, let us see what position it is that the Administration Democracy consider the least of the two evils. The Republicans believe in the power of Congress to exclude slavery from the Territories. There has not been a time in the last ten years, nor is there a probability of any in the next ten, when Congressional prohibition could pass both houses of Congress. So, as far as the right to take their slaves into the Territories is concerned, the South are tolerably save under the Republican doctrine.

They who suppose that Mr. Douglas has any principle in this matter, believe that he holds that the people of the Territories may exclude slavery. There has not been a Territory formed since the invention of this doctrine, that has not excluded slavery by a vote of the people; nor is there any probability that any will be formed in the future that will not. So, und r the Douglas plan, the South will have no chance for extending slavery in the Territories. Yet Senator Bright sa a Douglasiam is less bad than Republicanism; and while Douglavism is cherished in the South, the Breckinridge organs call Republicanism incendiary.

Why this contradiction? It is evident that the interests of slavery in the Territories are not regarded in the matter at all. They are freely offered to be sacrificed. The reason is so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein. If Mr Douglas should be elected, the offices would still remain in quasi-Democratic hands, and the Southern majority in all the Executive patronage would be preserved. Probably it would be increased, in the natural desire of Mr. Douglas to strengthen himself where he is weakest. If Mr. Lincoln should be elected, all this patronage and power, which Democracy has enjoyed so long that it regards its union with it as the only Union worth preserving, will pass into other hands, and the South will have to lay down the lion's share, which it has come to regard as a Southern right, and will have to share on equal

Think of the terrible pangs of dissolution, when all the executive, postal, customs and diplomatic offices are torn from the dying grasp of the Democracy, and pass into the hands of Republicans, with the same chance to Northern men and Republicans in the Judiciary and in the army and navy, that the South and Democracy have so long enjoyed! Think of the agonies of such a dissolution! Is it any wonder that in contemplating this they talk of "rending the Union from turret to foundation-stone," as only a mild remedy? Boabdil and his Moors never turned such sad, lingering, longing looks on the fair ecenes of Grenada, which they were leaving forever, as do these Democrats on the warm official seats which they fear are about to slide from under them. This is the dauger to Southern institutions. This is the incendiarism-the Republican fire in the rear of the office-holders, more incendiary to Democracy than Sampson's foxes with firebrands in their talls among the corn-shocks of the Philistines.

This is the dissolution of the Union that we hear so much about. The interests of playery are entirely lost sight of. What has a man to do with patriotism when his bread and butter is about to be taken from him? To retain even a Douglas-control of the Executive patronage, Democracy offers to abandon slavery in the Territories to popu-Inr sovereignty. What reason have we to suppose that it would not abandon slavery in the States to abolition, for the same consideration? "Doth the wild ass bray when he hath fodder?" Nor the tame one either. Take away our enormous and dangerous Executive patronage, and the danger to Southern institutions would vanish. Cut off the Postoffice Department, which Government has no business with, and which would be vastly better in private hands; our Customs Department, which is wholly indefensible as a means of supporting the Government, and which no party dare squarely defend on the principle of protection; our diplomatic establishments which are useless and only mischievous; and reduce our army, navy and dock-yards to their useful proportions; then we should hear no more of the threat of a dissolution of the Union as an element in a Presidential election. Then our boasted selfgovernment would cease to be the constant threatening of pronunciamentos, secession and civil war, which apparently have shamed the exhibitions of government of our Mexican neighbors. Then the boasted capacity for self-government of the people of the greatest Republic, would cease to be a play to frighten old women by the Chinese war-tactice-by hideous contortions of face, unearthly noises, terrific threats, and horrible rhetorical imagery, of pulling down the pillars of society, rending the Union from turret to foundation-stone, and "paving Pennsylvaniaavenue ten fathoms deep with dead bodies," Then "Ancient Pistol" would cease to be the model of statesmanship in the smartest nation in the world. Then in course of time the reign of common sense might begin, which now seems to have become unconstitutional and dangerous to the Union.

The Steam Fire-Engines. In a letter published in the Times of yesterday afternoon, Mr. Latta complains, with some appearance of justice, that wrong was done him in the disposition of the premiums upon the trial of steam fire-engines. The important point in the matter is not the speed with which progress was made around the ring, nor the distance to which water was thrown, but the time that elapsed in bringing the machine into a state fit for effective duty. The difference between 250 and 200 feet in the distance thrown when the engine is strained to its utmost capacity, may not be very essential in determining its efficiency; while the difference between 7:30 and 13:15 in getting ready for service is a great and important difference-one in which the safety of vast amounts of property may be involved.

By the employment of the generator in the place of the boiler—an use which belongs exclusively to Mr. Letter of the belongs made the steam fire-engine a fixed fact, through the shifty thereby acquired to get into action in the shortest time. This inely to Mr. Latta—that gentleman vention, or adaptation, is, in fact, the steam fire-engine. Its use belongs to Cincinnati, and forms the character of the Cincinnati engines—the most effective, we feel some local pride in saying, -of any that have yet been manufactured.

The Ebb-Tide of Journalistic Wit. Some one sent a piece of poerry, written in a female hand, to the Ohio Statesman, which was published. It was discovered that by selecting certain letters from the lines, the name of the editor, coupled with vulgar epithets, could be spelled out. The papers are copying it as a tremendous loke. We suppose that editors publish things every day containing letters which would spell out their names and any quantity of opproblems epithets to suit their taste. Vulgarity and low abuse is common enough, without searching for it in an enigma or an acrostic. The acrostic blackguardism is a stale joke, which almost any poetry can be adapted to. It shows poor taste in journals to chuckle over what, at the best, is an old and shabby trick. AT A MEETING, recently holden at Mount Auburn, to take measures to aid by subscription the building of a horse railway from town to that suburb, some of the citizens gave as a reason for their refusal to subscribe, that they could not conscientiously aid a concern which would do business on the Sabbath. Those gentlemen ought never to ent cheese or drink beer, lest by chance they give sinful encouragement to Sauday fern entation.
